

Living By Water

We, at CSW, believe shorelines are one of the most beautiful, unique places on earth. That's why we're the Ontario Coordinator for the Living by Water (LBW) project. Living by Water provides programs and materials to keep our shorelines healthy.

It all started over ten years ago with Clive Callaway and Sarah Kipp, two Salmon Arm, British Columbia shoreline residents. They wondered what they could do on their own property to protect the waterfront they loved. They were disappointed to find only limited resources for shoreline property owners. To remedy this, Clive and Sarah took action.

They developed the Living by Water Project to encourage simple, individual action to preserve healthy shorelines. Shoreline residents make choices every day which have a substantial impact on habitat and water quality. By making informed decisions, residents will preserve property values, provide a safe environment for their families and protect the sustainability of waterfront properties, while conserving the natural ecosystems all living things depend on.

For over ten years LBW has been finding solutions to preserve some of the most beautiful places on earth. Whether you're a shoreline property owner, or a group looking for new ways to educate your audience about shorelines, LBW can help.
